3. Background about the Research

3.1 Decline in exports of accounting services

3.2 Exports of services for the accounting sector is not growing in tandem with that of the professional services sector. According to Department of Statistics (DOS), total exports of accountancy services decreased from 2011 to 2015. In contrast, the overall professional services exports and legal services exports have increased over the same period.

3.3 Limitations of current internationalisation model

3.4 Currently, majority of the top 50 Singapore AEs are on international networks/associations. However, this has not translated to higher exports possibly due to the business models and internationalisation models adopted by the firms. Accounting firms which have regionalised tend to partner with AE(s) from another country (46%) and/or join an international network (44%) according to the findings from AE Regionalisation Survey. However, current internationalisation models have limitations and are unable to help firms internationalise beyond a certain scale. For instance, while firms on international networks generate more overseas revenue, the amount generated tend to be capped at 10% of their overall revenues. In addition, AEs on network usually refer international work to overseas network members which might prevent AEs from gaining expertise required for international expansion.

3.5 Capturing overseas demand in high growth areas

3.6 The demand for professional services is growing particularly in areas linked to technology, risk management and tax advisory in ASEAN and China according to the findings from the ACCA and SAC market demand survey. To effectively build up capabilities and capture overseas demand, there is a need to explore new models for firms to internationalise.

3.7 Furthermore, given the new digital age and economic shifts, it is timely to explore new forms of business models and internationalisation models that leverage on technology and trade networks. This will strengthen the connectivity and competitiveness of Singapore accounting firms. The Committee of the Future Economy Working Group on Legal and Accounting services highlighted the importance for Singapore's accounting firms to capture international demand for accounting services. Internationalisation is also an important pillar in the Professional Services Industry Transformation Map to drive the industry's growth.

3.8 In addition, SMPs play an important role in the internationalisation of SMEs. An ACCA study revealed that 31% of the Singaporean SMEs are likely to obtain international advice from their accountants particularly on areas of foreign regulation and exchange. As more SMPs internationalise, they would be able to better assist SMEs in their expansion, creating a multiplier effect.

3.9 This Research aims to help SMPs to internationalise and to increase exports.

4. Objectives of the Research

- 4.1 The results of the study will support the SAC in:

- e. Identify at least 1 new internationalisation model(s) (other than international association, alliance or network) for Singapore SMPs to enter into Asia taking into account future trends, current regulations, price points and talent mobility issues. The new internationalisation model should indicate the legal form, business model, infrastructure required, and the types of firms that are suitable to use such model.
